14. Rationale for Change(s) – if rationale involves accreditation requirements, please include specific references to that.

Due to an increased emphasis on health promotion and wellness in today's society the Kinesiology and Health Promotion (KHP) Department is experiencing an amplified interest in the area of health education and health promotion. The department currently offers a Bachelor of Science degree in Health Promotion and a 24-credit hour minor. The major program is currently designed as a Health Education –teacher certification program. The department is seeing a rise in the number of student requests for a major program in health promotion that does not require teacher certification. The minor in Health Promotion has been offered for many years. As interest in the area of health promotion has grown so has the number of minors in health promotion. Current estimate of minors is approximately 60 students.

The KHP Department is proposing a new health promotion non-teaching certification track as another option for students seeking a degree in Health Promotion. Students who select the Health Promotion non-teaching certification track will complete major courses within the department, along with a University approved minor, a program-related course sequence, and a practicum experience in a health education/health promotion setting. Since this proposed track is non-teaching and will not be associated with the teacher education program there would be the graduation requirement GPA of 2.0 minimum.

The program being proposed meets professional standards advanced by the National Commission for Health Education Credentialing (NCHEC). Increasingly, employers are realizing that properly trained health educators have a specific set of skills and they advertise for people that have CHES (Certified Health Education Specialist) certification. The standards for CHES are provided by NCHEC and the examination to achieve CHES certification is administered by that same group. KHP students will be prepared to take and pass that examination.

After graduation, students with the degree in Health Promotion non-teaching certification will be eligible to take the CHES exam, apply to graduate schools in health related areas of study, seek employment in hospitals, health departments, worksite wellness, state or national agencies and organizations, or other similar settings.
